A half dozen Tucson Orienteering Club regulars made it up Redington Pass Road for some orienteering on the classic map known as Chimney Rock. Spring was warming the hills and had dried out the vegetation, but the temperature was still really nice, with a stiff breeze and sun. Larry Pederson set a full range of courses from white through red, and his longer courses included plenty of the climb that the map is well known for. That, a knee injury, and at least one control that seemed to go missing before the courses were run, explain the many DNFs in the results.

Thanks go to the other meet workers: Larry for course-setting and collecting some controls. Jeff Coker and Jeff Brucker also collected many controls, with Jeff Brucker showing up late in the morning specifically for task of bringing in the most distant controls (he hadn't been able to run earlier due to another commitment).

Here are the results:
